Now, from the Abstract of Local Taxation Returns lately published we find that the revenues of the various local authorities of London, inoluding the City, from whatever source derived, even reckoning loans, amounted in the year 1871-2 to no more than £4,792,217. One of the tems entering into this total, however, it increased by about a quarter of a million. Moreover, this total does not include the cost of relieving the poor. But from the report of the Local Government Board we learn that the otal outlay for relief of the paor in the whole metropolis in 1872-it was unnewhat loss in 1871—amounted to £1.756.929. The total metropolitan police, amounted to about 26.800,000 during the last year for which we have returns. We need of London with a population more than three times as great. To put the facts in another way, so as to show the relative burdensomeness of taxation in the two cities, it may be observed that the charge per head of the populamp and lighted him to the cabin. The door 1876, as one of the grand features of the Con. Two stoumers have been lost during the year, count for its being prolonged well into the next lation of New York for inunicipal purposes alone approuches very closely £6, whereas the charge in London is not quite £2 per bend. From Mr. Havemeyer's report it further appears that the debt of New York city amounts at present to $26,240,914 sterling. From this sum, however, we must deduct the money in the sinking fund, amounting to between four and five millions. The actual not debt we find then to be £21,274,390. Turning now once more to the local taxation returns for the debte of the various London local authorities, we discover that they amount to no more than £15,077,509. These returns, it must be observed, do not give the poor rate accounts for the metropolis in a separate form; it is not possible, therefore, to ascertain from them the loans contracted by the London unions. But as the total debt for which the poor rates of all England and Wales are liable does not exceed £3,008,052, it is evident that, even f we assume the whole of this cebt to be due from London parishes, the total habilities of London would still full considerably short of those of New York. On the most extreme supposition, the debte of London would not amount to 28 perfend of the population while the debt of New York reaches 221 per head. Only five years ugo-that is to say. on January 1st, 1869-the New York debt. after-deducting the sums in the sinking fund. amounted to only 27,258,788; on September 16th, 1871, when the Tammany Ring was deposed. it had risen to $19.457.565.
